

I'll keep this short because I know we're all busy starting back up for block three and don't want to read everyone's life story. Here goes. Before medical school, I was content to sit on the sidelines and not run for any positions of leadership, but I always wondered how I would fair if I did run for a position of leadership. Even though I was content to not run for leadership, I always ended up advising leadership on the best course of action and providing valuable insight for those in charge to make the right decisions. I did this in the charity organization Camp Kesem, where I had the ears of leadership in only my first year of working with the group. I helped organize fundraisers, notify students of upcoming events, and most of all make the camp run smoothly with all 60 counselors. I was also a valuable addition to the retinal clinic Georgia Retina, where in only my second year, I was promoted to senior technician and ran the clinic managing the technicians under me and deserving the respect of the doctors, two of which wrote me letters of recommendation to CUSOM. Those of you who know me, and I hope to have a conversation with each and every one of our class, know that if you come to me with a question or are looking for advice, I will not hesitate to give you assistance in the form of an answer or point you in the direction of someone who can help you. I try to be as approachable and friendly as possible because I want to get to know all my future colleagues. All this is to say, I am very good at providing assistance and insight to those who need it, and I think I would be a great fit for class vice president.
